Methodology for classifying case stories

In response to the call for case stories, respondents submitted stories to the OECD and WTO. The case stories were entered in a database and given a number. Then the analysis team read each study and identified the country, sub-region or region in which the activity took place. General studies covering aid for trade activities with no particular country or region were labelled “global”. Authorship was established according to the institutional affiliation of the author.

The country and number in brackets in the text refer to the country of a programme or project and its number in the database. All submissions were allocated to one of three classification:

1. Lowering trade costs through trade facilitation;
2. Strengthening the public sector by reforming policy to enhance strategy and building capacity to better conduct trade policy;
3. Invigorating the private sector through sector-wide programmes as well as industry-specific policies.

Case stories were given indicators of reported outputs and outcomes. They were considered to have a reported output if they provided quantitative values associated with a programme or project: for example, number of people trained, number of ministries co-ordinated, or number of meetings held. Case stories that reported work on changing a law were also considered to have a reported output. Case stories were considered to have a reported outcome if they provided quantitative values associated with any of ten “performance” areas: export increases; trade structure; regional integration; import efficiency; investment increases; poverty reduction; increases in incomes; gender measures; employment; health and environment.

Identifying emphases – methodology for concept counts

The word searches were carried out by counting the number of mentions of keywords, which were divided into clusters. The keyword mentions within a cluster were then added. Because there were case stories written in English, Spanish and French, the words were included in all three languages. The clusters were further divided into two classifications: trade variables and trade-related outcomes.

The words and their classifications are as follows:

Trade variables
Import	Export
import	export
imports	exportacion
importaciones	exportaciones
importations	exportation
tariff	exports
arancel	diversification
arancelario	diversificacion
